The Vanishing Shrub-Steppe

20 minutes

The shrub-steppe landscape of eastern Washington once covered over 12 million acres, yet today only scattered pieces remain. Seemingly devoid of life, the shrub-steppe eco-region is actually home to a surprising variety of animals and plants. In The Vanishing Shrub-Steppe, award winning producer Thomas Ager shows you the secrets of this land of sagebrush and bunchgrass. For much of the video the narrator is silent, beckoning the viewer to enter this land of solitude. Near the end, you meet four imperiled "shrub-steppe obligate" species in spectacular close-up views.
